I was in Germany a week ago. I had good meetings with my colleagues working on connectivity, big data, smart factory and strategy updates.

I met with our new CIO Jan Brecht. He is aware of the great work we do at DTNA. I wish you all a wonderful Thanksgiving holiday with families and friends.

This week, we have launched a new OCS Execution board which provides metrics and information on how we are executing against our plan. Thanks to everyone's efforts and in particular to Sydney Nopson to pull this one out in-time before the year end. We are forecasting we'll meet our project execution targets and stay within our operational budget plan. Great job team! Please stop by the outside MP9 break room and check it out!

Azure is scary. OK—its not really scary but it introduces a new paradigm of how we build/run and operate things. I spent 2 great days with the Telematics team that is working in this exciting new environment and trying to figure out how to implement enterprise class applications in it.

IT is one of the leading diversity organizations in DTNA. The Daimler Diversity & Inclusion Conference was a powerful reminder of how everyone wins when all of our employees feel included. Look for highlights in the next IT Newsletter.
